World Cup officials consider horn ban

DURBAN, SOUTH AFRICA • Wasn't the whole point of this exercise, of bringing the World Cup to this far-flung, non-traditional soccer land in the first place, that South Africa could show the rest of the planet its culture, its heritage, its soul? So the nation could, in effect, blow its own horn? And now they're contemplating taking that horn away from

Flemish separatist party wins in Belgian election

Themove to break up Belgium gathered momentum Sunday as separatists won an emphatic election victory in Flanders, the prosperous Dutch-speaking half of the fiercely divided nation. A stunning electoral success for Bart de Wever's Flemish nationalist party marks a significant new challenge to the fragile unity of a country where tensions between French and Dutch speakers run deep. Scheduled to take
