Random Article: Dance Magazine: So, you've graduated. Now what? How to navigate the tricky time between college and career. In college, a dancer's work is scheduled almost to the minute. You train intensely, discuss goals with advisors and put all that you've learned to practice. But when you graduate, the structure is gone. There's little certainty of what the next year--or month--will hold. When Beka Burnham graduated from The Boston Conservatory's musical theater program in 2014, she "kind of felt like a slacker," even though she was actively auditioning. "You have to battle the anxiety," she says, "and..." keep reading this article

STAMFORD, Conn., Nov. 15 /PRNewswire/ -- Purdue Pharma L.P. today announced a pilot program to integrate unique radio frequency identification (RFID) tags on labels for 100-tablet bottles of OxyContin(R) (oxycodone HCl controlled-release) Tablets shipped to two of its largest customers. Purdue is one of the first pharmaceutical companies to provide fully integrated, anti-counterfeiting packaging designed to protect pharmaceutical products against counterfeiting and diversion through individual electronic "license plates." It is also the first to comply with the multi-layered approach, including RFID, to combat counterfeit drugs recommended today by the FDA's Counterfeit Drug Task Force. The initial shipments of the RFID-tagged bottles will be sent this week to Wal-Mart and H.D. Smith, the seventh-largest drug wholesaler in the U.S.

RFID involves the placement of small electromagnetic chips on cartons, pallets, and individual product labels. This allows manufacturers and wholesalers to track products more closely than ever before as they move throughout the distribution process.

"Our objective in implementing these security features is to deter counterfeiting, reduce diversion, and help ensure the authenticity, safety, and integrity of our products," said Aaron Graham, Vice President and Chief Security Officer for Purdue Pharma. "RFID technology provides the pharmaceutical industry with the ability to create an electronic drug pedigree, or tracking mechanism, that will lead to greater supply chain security and patient protection against counterfeit drugs."

A drug "pedigree" is the paperwork that follows products from the manufacturer, to wholesaler, to pharmacy. It is more difficult to track the authenticity of drugs with incomplete pedigrees. Purdue's initiative addresses a number of consumer safety issues, including the redistribution of counterfeit, adulterated, re-labeled, and diverted prescription drugs of unknown authenticity, efficacy, and safety. Based on the availability of RFID tags, which are assembled in Maryland and Germany, Purdue plans to expand the implementation of RFID labels for all bottles of OxyContin Tablets.

"This is an outstanding collaboration between a manufacturer and distributor which will help protect the nation's supply of medicines and help ensure that patients receive only authentic, efficacious, and safe products," said John Burke, Vice President, National Association of Drug Diversion Investigators and Coordinator, Southern Ohio Prescription Drug HIDTA (High Intensity Drug Trafficking Area).

"RFID technology is an important new tool that will help our community pharmacists ensure the safety and authenticity of the products they

ABSTRACT
The use of digital technology, including computers, cell phones, computer games, and so on, most recently, on-the-go for recreational purposes, has increased among our youth over the past 15 years. Children and adolescent between the ages of 8 to 18 years spend an average of 5-6 hours per day using information and communication technologies. It is a useful progress because of the increase of internet usage which is unlimited, uncontrolled and uninhibited and easiness which arrival all sorts of to informations or persons but this state can cause to some important negative results too. The computer games, the internet explores is gradually estrange from social life the children and adolescent. In this paper, has been mentioned to negative effect of internet usage, computer games on mental health of children and adolescents. [TAF Prev Med Bull. 2008; 7(3): 253-256]

Motorcycle-to-car impact: influence of the mass of the rider in the calculation of the relative impact velocity

In this paper an analysis method for a collision between a motorcycle and a car is presented, with the limitation that the frontal part of the motorcycle is involved, with wheelbase shortening. The velocities of the vehicles before the collision are usually the most important information for analysis of an accident and its causes, and therefore the methods to succeed in estimating these velocities are of great importance. The work focuses on finding an empirical formulation for the relative velocity between the motorcycle and the other vehicle, starting from the kinetic energy loss due to the collision and allowing for the mass of the motorcycle's rider at the moment of collision. The equation was found by numerically simulating seven different impact configurations between a car and a motorcycle, with various impact velocities and masses in predefined ranges. Experimental crash tests conducted between a car and a motorcycle and the use of a high-speed video camera allowed the motion of the two-wheeler and its driver to be studied during the impact. A series of tests on crashes between a motorcycle with a rider and a vehicle was carried out, which also allowed validation of the formulation found.

It has been demonstrated in previous research that the collision closing speed in a collision of a motorcycle or scooter with a car can be estimated on the basis of the residual crushing damage shared between the two vehicles, using an energy-derived relationship between the residual crushing damage and the collision closing speed. This paper reviews the original research and develops two further models that allow independent estimates of the collision closing speed to be calculated on the basis of either the residual deformation to the motorcycle or the residual deformation to the car. The models are validated from further crash test data taken from the literature. The principal results of the analyses are presented in the form of two predictive equations, together with the

Zanamivir and oseltamivir are two agents of a new class of drugs-neuraminidase inhibitors-to receive FDA approval for the treatment of influenza. Because the two agents are more expensive yet have a more favorable side effect profile than the older treatments amantadine and rimantidine, coverage decisions can be difficult to make. This month's column presents a decision-analytic model of influenza treatments, using zanamivir as the main example. This approach is helpful for health care systems that wish to assess clinical and economic outcomes to make informed decisions between competing products.

It is estimated that each year 10% to 20% of the US population becomes ill due to the influenza virus. ...

Collecting information from the scene of a motor vehicle collision: The mechanism of injury

Authors: Yousaf Shah, Guillaume Alinier

Abstract: Journal of Local and Global Health Science, Volume 2015, Issue 2, November 2015. While dealing with motor vehicle collision (MVC) victims, the Paramedics on-scene make patient management decisions based on assessment of the physiological parameters, anatomic site of injury, mechanism of injury (MOI), and some special considerations (age and underlying illnesses). In victims with normal physiological and anatomical parameters, and no alarming consideration, the MOI alone is found to be an independent predictor of mortality and functional impairment (2, 3); the Emergency Physician can utilize such information to guide further management of the MVC victims. Information concerning the MOI mostly comes from the Paramedics who retrieved the patient from the crash scene. The purpose of this review is to explore the injury-predictive mechanisms of MVC and to guide the Paramedics in conveying such vital information to the Emergency Physician during handover process. A literature search was made using the online search engine PubMed to identify studies exploring the injury-predictive mechanisms of MVC. Keyword combinations were used that included: Motor/Vehicle/Collision/Road/Traffic/Accidents/Trauma/Mechanism of injury. Auto vs. pedestrian and Motorcycle crashes were excluded. A total of 8 articles were found to be relevant. The mechanisms of MVC which are highly predictive of a significant occult injury include ejection from vehicle (1,4,5), intrusion of the passenger compartment more than 12 inches (1,2,4), prolonged extrication time >20 minutes (4,5), death in the same passenger compartment (1,5), high speed crashes (4), deformity of the steering wheel (2), and rollover causing significant intrusion or ejection of the victim (1). Paramedics reporting the aforementioned crash-specific variables would alert the Emergency Physician and help him better deal with MVC victims who have normal physiological and anatomical parameters, and no alarming considerations. Provision of MVC scene photographs to the emergency physician could be a future research project to assess its impact on altering patient management and outcome. References: 1. The "Main catalogue" link points to "Explore the British Libran (56m items)". The "Printed material" section lists "Bookbindings", "British National Bibliography", "English Short Title Catalogue", and "Incunabula (early printing)". The "Manuscripts" section lists "Archives and manuscripts" and "Illuminated manuscripts". The "Other catalogues" section lists "India Family History", "Photographically illustrated books", "Photographs", "Sound", "Victorian ephemera", and "Full list of catalogues". A banner for "our new range of romantic titles" features an illustration of a woman and a red button labeled "Find out more >". The "Latest news" section includes a link to "The Look of Love" with a description: "This new book is a celebration of love through the ages, gathering together more than 100 romantic illustrations". The "Quick links" section includes "Support us", "Catalogues (full list)", and "Reader Pass registration". The footer shows the Windows taskbar with various application icons and the system clock displaying 19:55 on 10.2.2014.

SEARCHING

You can perform a search across all Emerald content using either the Search tool at the top of each page or the Advanced Search tool on this page. If you are a registered user of the site, you can save your search criteria in order to re-run the search later. By default, search results are sorted by relevance.

ADVANCED SEARCH

Enter one or more search terms and select the type of content to be searched. For example, to search for articles and chapters with the word "library" in their title, enter the text "library" and select "Content item title". Select any additional filters, such as the Publication Date of "Last 6 months", and click "Search".

Abstract

Raisins are popular snacks with a favourable nutrient profile, being high in dietary fibre, polyphenols and a number of vitamins and minerals, in addition to being rich in fructose. In light of evidence demonstrating improvements in glycaemic control with moderate fructose intake and low-glycaemic index (GI) fruits, our aim was to determine the GI, insulin index (II) and postprandial responses to raisins in an acute feeding setting. A total of ten healthy participants (four male and six female) consumed breakfast study meals on four occasions over a 2- to 8-week period: meal 1: white bread (WB) (108 g WB; 50 g available carbohydrate) served as the control and was consumed on two separate occasions; meal 2: raisins (R50) (69 g raisins; 50 g available carbohydrate); and meal 3: raisins (R20) (one serving, 28 g raisins; 20 g available carbohydrate). Postprandial glucose and insulin were

Abstract

Raisins are popular snacks with a favourable nutrient profile, being high in dietary fibre, polyphenols and a number of vitamins and minerals, in addition to being rich in fructose. In light of evidence demonstrating improvements in glycaemic control with moderate fructose intake and low-glycaemic index (GI) fruits, our aim was to determine the GI, insulin index (II) and postprandial responses to raisins in an acute feeding setting. A total of ten healthy participants (four male and six female) consumed breakfast study meals on four occasions over a 2- to 8-week period: meal 1: white bread (WB) (108 g WB; 50 g available carbohydrate) served as the control and was consumed on two separate occasions; meal 2: raisins (R50) (69 g raisins; 50 g available carbohydrate); and meal 3: raisins (R20) (one serving, 28 g raisins; 20 g available carbohydrate). Postprandial glucose and insulin were measured over a 2 h period for the determination of GI, glycaemic load (GL) and II. The raisin meals, R50 and R20, resulted in significantly reduced postprandial glucose and insulin responses when compared with WB ($P < 0.05$). Furthermore, raisins were determined to be low-GI, -GL and -II foods. The favourable effect of raisins on postprandial glycaemic response, their insulin-sparing effect and low GI combined with their other metabolic benefits may indicate that raisins are a healthy choice not only for the general population but also for individuals with diabetes or insulin resistance.

Key words: Raisins; Dried fruit; Glycaemic index; Glycaemic load

Raisins are one of the most commonly consumed dried fruits, are eaten across the globe, and have a unique nutrient profile that may confer distinctive health benefits when compared with other fruit. Raisins are a rich source of polyphenols and phenolic acids, which may serve as antioxidants and promote an anti-inflammatory environment with potential health benefits^(1–3). Raisins are also high in dietary fibre and prebiotics, such as inulin, which have been shown to produce a healthier colonic microflora profile in addition to possibly aiding weight management and reducing the risk of CVD⁽⁴⁾. A clinical study found that raisins as part of a healthy diet improved blood lipids and reduced other risk factors for CVD⁽⁵⁾.

Raisins are also high in fructose, which has a low glycaemic index (GI). While concerns have been raised that fructose may have adverse metabolic effects and promote weight gain, a recent meta-analysis⁽⁶⁾ demonstrated that moderate intakes of fructose may improve glycaemic control, without harming cardiometabolic risk factors⁽⁶⁾. This is especially important in light of recent evidence demonstrating that low-GI fruits may improve glycaemic and cardiovascular markers, including HbA1c and blood pressure⁽⁷⁾.

Given that raisins are the most commonly consumed dried fruit, are high in fructose and the controversy surrounding the cardiometabolic effects of fructose, we investigated the effect

Weight Change and Risk of Heart Attack in Middle-Aged British Men

Revision received February 1, 1995.

Abstract

Background Both weight gain and weight loss have been associated with increased risk of cardiovascular disease mortality in recent studies from the US. This finding has led to concern and uncertainty about appropriate advice for overweight and obese subjects.

Methods In a prospective study of cardiovascular disease, the relationship between weight change over a 5-year period and subsequent risk of a heart attack during a further 6.5 year follow-up was examined in 7100 middle-aged British men.

Results Over half of the men remained stable (<4% change in bodyweight) and served as the reference group: 31% gained weight and

Abstract

This paper seeks to make use of Appadurai's characterization of the contemporary global condition in terms of the disjunctive flows of a series of related 'social scapes'. This categorization is applied to an analysis of key recent developments within elite professional football, together taken to represent the 'Europeanization' of the 'soccerscape'. The paper then goes on to consider possible meanings and significance of such developments, in particular whether it is possible to argue that they may contribute, or have the potential to contribute to the emergence of a sense of 'Europeanness' among followers of football, especially the young.

Several contrasting hypotheses have been proposed to account for host age-biased parasite distribution, with some of them suggesting a key role of ectoparasites in the evolution and maintenance of weight hierarchies within broods. We examined parasite distribution among individual hosts across the whole period of host exposure to the parasite in a host system that shows distinct within-brood differences in age and age-related mortality. By contrast to previous hypotheses, we found that the abundance of a haematophagous, mobile ectoparasite Carnus haemapterus on nestling European rollers (Coracias garrulus) was highest approximately during the mid-nestling stage of their host, coinciding with the inflection point of the host growth phase. Parasite load increased neither with absolute resource availability (i.e. body size), nor body condition index. By contrast to previous evidence, higher parasite load under natural conditions was associated with a stronger cell-mediated immune response. However, this association was moderated by low parasite densities, as well as a better brood body condition index. Overall, although we revealed remarkable host ontogenetic effects on parasite distribution, the

A Hypothesis Concerning the Character of Islamic Art

Asli Gocer

From: Journal of the History of Ideas
Volume 60, Number 4, October 1999
pp. 683-692 | 10.1353/jhi.1999.0037

In lieu of an abstract, here is a brief excerpt of the content:
Journal of the History of Ideas 60.4 (1999) 683-692

Why Islamic art has the distinctive features it has continues to generate clashing explanations. The Islamic visual treasury has no figural images, for instance, and three-dimensional sculpture or large scale oil painting, but instead contains miniatures, vegetal ornaments, arabesque surface patterns, and complex geometrical designs. To account for the phenomena the following radically opposing theories have been offered: the influence of Judaism, the Quranic prohibition against making images, Islamic resentment of the glory of Byzantine icons, logocentricism of classical Islam, the spiritual dimension of Islam, tacit Islamic assertion of "otherness," and contingency of history. The merits of these theories have been roundly discussed in the literature, and so I will not repeat the task here. I will insist that none of these theories offer a coherent explanation for all arts, but my presumption is that such an explanation is possible. In nonvisual arts the Muslim prefers simple tunes over that of the symphony, for instance, whirling dervishes over the ballet, and lyric poetry over

ANCHIZONAL ALPINE METAMORPHISM OF TATRIC COVER SEDIMENTS IN THE MALE KARPATY MTS. (WESTERN CARPATHIANS)

DUSAN PLASIENKA, SERGEY PETROVICH KORIKOVSKY, ANTON HACURA

Permo-Mesozoic Tatric cover sediments in the Male Karpaty Mts. suffered an early Alpine (Cretaceous) low-T metamorphic imprint mostly at an estimated temperature of 250–300 °C (illite-crystallinity, composition of authigenic micas, deformation mechanisms). The source of the metamorphic temperature is tentatively interpreted as an increased heat flow inherited from a previous period of crustal thinning and probable shear heating as well. Synkinematic metamorphic recrystallization is a consequence of basement thrust stacking and thermal equilibration between cold footwall sediments and hot hangingwall basement rocks detached at mid-crustal levels.

Noise analysis for comparator-based circuits

Download

Author: Sepke, T.; Holloway, P.; Sodini, C.G.; Lee, H.-S.

Citable URI: <http://hdl.handle.net/1721.1/61660>

Department: Massachusetts Institute of Technology. Dept. of Electrical Engineering and Computer Science

Publisher: Institute of Electrical and Electronics Engineers

Datum: 2009-03

Abstrakt:
Noise analysis for comparator-based circuits is presented. The goal is to gain insight into the different sources of noise in these circuits for design purposes. After the general analysis techniques are established, they are applied to different noise sources in the comparator-based switched-capacitor pipeline analog-to-digital converter (ADC). The results show that the noise from the virtual ground threshold detection comparator dominates the overall ADC noise performance. The noise from the charging current can also be significant, depending on the size of the capacitors used, but the contribution was small in the prototype. The other noise sources have contributions comparable to those in op-amp-based designs, and their effects can be managed through appropriate design. In the prototype, folded flicker noise was found to be a significant contributor to the broadband noise because the flicker noise of the comparator extends beyond the Nyquist rate of the converter.

African Journals Online (AJOL)

African Journals OnLine (AJOL) is the world's largest and pre-eminent collection of peer-reviewed, African-published scholarly journals.

Historically, scholarly information has flowed from North to South and from West to East. It has also been difficult for African researchers to access the work of other African academics.

In partnership with hundreds of journals from all over the continent, AJOL works to change this, so that African-origin research output is available to Africans and to the rest of the world.

AJOL is a Non-Profit Organisation based in South Africa.

Search tips:

- Search terms are case-insensitive
- Common words are ignored
- By default only articles containing all terms in the query are returned (i.e., AND is implied)
- Combine multiple words with OR to find articles containing either term; e.g., education OR research
- Use parentheses to create more complex queries; e.g., archive (journal OR conference) NOT theses
- Search for an exact phrase by putting it in quotes; e.g., "open access publishing"
- Exclude a word by prefixing it with - or NOT; e.g. online -politics or online NOT politics
- Use * in a term as a wildcard to match any sequence of characters; e.g., soci morality* would match documents containing "sociological" or "societal"

Development of a water quality index based on a European classification scheme

H Boyacioglu

Abstract

This study comprised the development of a new index called the 'universal water quality index (UWQI)'. This index has advantages over pre-existing indices by reflecting the appropriateness of water for specific use, e.g. drinking water supply rather than general supply, and has been developed by studying the supranational standard, i.e. the European Community Standard. Three classification schemes for water quality are proposed for surface water quality assessment. Water quality determinants of the new index are cadmium, cyanide, mercury, selenium, arsenic, fluoride, nitrate-nitrogen, dissolved oxygen, biochemical oxygen demand, total phosphorus, pH and total coliform. The mathematical equations to transform the actual concentration values into quality indices have been formulated. The weighted sum method was proposed to obtain overall index scores based on individual index (sub-index) values. The application of the new index was demonstrated at a sampling station on Tahtali Reservoir in Turkey based on observed water quality data. Results revealed that the overall quality of the surface water falls under the 'excellent' class. On the other hand water quality was strongly affected by agricultural and domestic uses. This technique is believed to assist decision makers in reporting the state of the water quality, as well as investigating spatial and temporal changes. It is also useful to determine the level of acceptability for the individual parameter by referring to the concentration ranges defined in the proposed classification scheme.

Article Abstract

Title: Protection of nature and biological diversity in Turkey
Author: Süheyla Suzan Alica ✉
Address: Department of Environmental Law, Law Faculty, Gazi University, Emniyet Mah. Muammer Bostancı Caddesi No. 4, Beşevler-Ankara, Turkey
Journal: International Journal of Environment and Sustainable Development 2014 - Vol. 13, No.3 pp. 316 - 337
Abstract: This paper focuses on the Turkish legislation regarding protection of nature and biological diversity. As it is known, biological resources are vital for the humanity's survival and for the economic and social development of nations. However, biological diversity is under threat around the world. Nevertheless issues regarding food, clean water, healthy environment, production and consumption are rising globally and efforts towards finding solutions to these problems are ongoing. Turkey also has the responsibility to protect and use this important wealth rationally for the welfare of the future generations. Turkey fulfils its responsibilities and commitments arising from the conventions signed as a result of the efforts that Turkey has supported for many years in the field of nature and biological diversity protections. In this context, this paper includes nature protection legislation in Turkey and examines the protected areas. Turkish national legislation will be harmonised with the legislation adopted by the European Community, strictly in connection with the accession process, particularly the Bird and Habitat Directives. These directives will be transposed through the Draft Law on the Conservation of Nature and Biological Diversity.
Keywords: biological diversity; protected areas; environmental protection; Turkey; national legislation; nature.
